IMPRISONMENT

The defendant is committed to the custody of the United States Bureau of Prisons to be imprisoned for a total term of 15 months.

The Court recommends that Immigration and Customs Enforcement begin removal proceedings during service of sentence.

The Court incorporates its Memorandum Opinion and Order in United States v. Sanchez-Sanchez, CR 10-1793 (D.N.M.), filed November 16, 2010 (Doc. 25). Sanchez-Sanchez` offense level is 21 and his criminal history category is I, establishing a guideline imprisonment range of 37 to 46 months. After carefully considering the Sentencing Guidelines and the parties` arguments, the Court finds a variance is warranted in light of Sanchez-Sanchez` circumstances. Sanchez-Sanchez illegally reentered the United States after a felony conviction for knowingly and intentionally importing marijuana into the United States from Mexico on November 29, 1990. Having considered the nature and circumstances of the offense and Sanchez-Sanchez` history and characteristics, the Court believes that the sentence that the advisory Guidelines recommend is too high. The Court believes that, because of the age of Sanchez-Sanchez` conviction, it should be treated like a 12-level enhancement, rather than a 16-level enhancement. This would produce a range of 21 to 27 months. The Court further believes that Sanchez-Sanchez` age and his family circumstances indicate that he is not a danger to the public, and justify lowering the sentence further. There is no history of violence in his past. It is true that Sanchez-Sanchez returned to the United States after his previous sentence of 21 months, and the Court is concerned whether a sentence below 21 months will fully serve the goal of deterrence under 18 U.S.C. § 3553(a). On the other hand, he did not return after the marijuana conviction until recently, and a 15-month sentence may deter him from another reentry crime as the 21-month sentence has apparently deterred him from drug smuggling. Also, he did not return to the United States until violence in Mexico became heightened. Taking all the circumstances together, the Court believes Sanchez-Sanchez` age and his family circumstances warrant further reducing his sentence, treating his past crime like a conviction worthy of a 10-level enhancement, producing an offense level equivalent to a level of 14, and approximating a guideline imprisonment range of 15 to 21 months. Applying the parsimony clause, the Court believes a sentence at the low end of the range is appropriate in this case, and sentences Sanchez-Sanchez to a term of 15 months imprisonment and to a term of 2 years supervised release. Sanchez-Sanchez` term of supervised release shall be unsupervised under the condition that Sanchez-Sanchez must not reenter the United States without legal authorization.

The Court finds that a sentence of 15 months adequately reflects the seriousness of the offense, promotes respect for the law, provides just punishment, affords adequate deterrence, protects the public, and otherwise fully reflects each of the factors embodied in 18 U.S.C. § 3553(a). While the Court`s task, as a district court, is not to arrive at a reasonable sentence -- it is to come up with one that reflects the factors in 18 U.S.C. § 3553(a), see United States v. Conlan, 500 F.3d 1167, 1169 (10th Cir. 2007)("[A] district court`s job is not to impose a reasonable sentence. Rather, a district court`s mandate is to impose a sentence sufficient, but not greater than necessary, to comply with the purposes of section 3553(a)(2).")(citation omitted) -- the Court believes this sentence is more reasonable than the sentence the Guidelines recommends. The Court believes a sentence of 15 months is sufficient without being greater than necessary to comply with the purposes of punishment Congress set forth in the Sentencing Reform Act.
